

Deciding whether bunny.net is worth a Chicago push

Account entry plan for Spencer Refer | Prepared Thursday, October 1, 2026 | Sources: HubSpot, Lemlist, ZoomInfo

5 leads in Wave C	0 US-based contacts	12-mo high Engineering open roles (Sep 9)	0 replies
STAGE Wave C prospect. No deal.	RUNNING NOW CTF ABM - bunny.net (Wave C), 5 leads	LAST TOUCH Sep 29-30: 'fiber is the bottleneck under your edge network' to 3 new leads	NEXT STEP Mon Oct 5: one qualifying email to Costas Drogos (Infrastructure Manager) bunny.net is a fast-growing, developer-focused CDN from Slovenia. Its infrastructure team in your sequence sits in Australia, Czechia and Germany; no one is US-based, and no one has replied. Its engineering hiring is at a 12-month high (Sep 9). A CDN does run Chicago PoPs, but bunny tends to colocate and buy IP transit rather than own fiber paths. This is a qualify-or-drop account: one email to the Infrastructure Manager asking how Chicago PoPs are connected.

Bottom line

What bunny is, in one analogy

A CDN is a chain of newsstands that keeps copies of popular papers close to readers. Each stand needs a delivery van route, but small chains usually hire a courier rather than build roads.

1. Costas Drogos Infrastructure Manager

Why them: Qualifying question.

Channel: Email Mon Oct 5 (morning CT = afternoon in Germany) | Subject: bunny's Chicago PoP

Costas, a quick question. Does bunny buy its own fiber between data centers in cities like Chicago, or is it all transit and colocation? If it's the latter, I'll stop writing. If not, I own underground fiber in Chicago and can send a map.

The plan

When	Move	Notes
Mon Oct 5	Email Costas Drogos.	-
Fri Oct 9	Stop Wave C for the Australian engineers.	-
Oct 19	Keep or drop based on the answer.	-

What progress looks like (for management)

Oct 19	Qualified in or out	HubSpot note
